E.'s plane was late this morning and arrived about 11:30, bringing her, Miss Schukraft, Denise, Sasha and David. Being a tourist plane, it had, like the one on which Stevie and Nicky came, stopped at Gander and Shannon.

Selden Chapin came to see me this afternoon. I told him of the arrangements I had made about going to Holland.

Von Kessel of the German EDC Delegation called on me. He had heard [redacted] the French might ask for some additional protocols. I told him I would be [redacted] unsympathetic to such a proceeding and would send a cable on the subject to the Department.

Lt. Stuber called on me.

Then I saw Charlie Obendorff, Jacqueline's husband. He had come down from The Hague and wanted to know if I could help him in an idea [redacted] he had about Moluccan independence. I told him [redacted] the East Indies were way off my beat and [redacted] I could not be useful in this connection or even consider the matter.

Graham Martin and I agreed upon the content of a letter [redacted] I will send to Allen Dulles.

Tonight E. and I went to the opening of Henri Bernstein's play "Le Crime Parfait". It was a mystery spectacle, [redacted] well acted. We saw lots of [redacted] friends in the audience.
